

HLRP (10-21-77): "Uncle George and Aunt Lyd married and went up to the house that is now the Eddie Cosklo house. That house used to be part of the farm. They then moved down to 56 Belmont Street and started the dairy. I wouldn't be surprised if old Andrew Cosklo bought the farm from them. Margaret, Maurice and Spencer were all in town. Maurice didn't like the dairy end of it--he wanted the farm and went back out to the Maurice Russell farm."

"Uncle George died in 26. Robert MacMillan died in 29. Aunt Lyd went to live with Margaret on Canaan Street."

"Aunt Lyd loved you kids." Note by SRP: I recall going up to Margaret MacMillan's after Sunday School on one occasion and being taken upstairs to visit an old lady in bed. She was having lunch--sliced tomatoes on toast with mayonnaise. Sliced tomatoes on toast with mayonnaise invariably make me think of that visit with Aunt Lydia Spencer Russell.

SRP (10-21-77): "Where did Lois and Spencer Russell live after they were married?"

HLRP: "At 56 Belmont Street. Uncle George and Aunt Lyd moved to Oak Avenue--it was upstairs."

HLRP (10-23-77): "Uncle George always smoked a pipe. You'd never see him without it. In the end he had cancer of the lip."

IWC (p. 165)--One of the eight children that survived Roswell P. Patterson [R. P. Patterson's Sons. Wholesale Groceries, Carbondale, Pa.] when he died Sept. 21, 1899 is Mrs. Clarence E. Spencer, Carbondale. Three of the grandchildren by whom R. P. Patterson was survived are Mallory, Marjorie and Russell Spencer.

How, if at all, are these Spencers related to Lydia Spencer?
